

What Happens with David, Stays with David.

"I'm in love with David, I've always been in love with David" Dana said to Robin on the phone. At least that's what Dana thought.... Until.

Until he dooped. At that very minute...all Dana could think about was taking a shower. Dana thought, the thought of taking a shower at that very moment was so weird considering she had just found out that the man she thought she was in love with might be sleeping with another woman.

"You're kidding?" Robin asked. "Yes. I think he's cheating, but I'm not sure." Dana looked to make sure she was firmly planted on the side of her bed. She said trying not cry into the phone.

In Dana's mind, she always thought she and David were interconnected and woven like the Internet connected people throughout the world. But, in reality...a far place from Dana's made up little world with David, there were nothing but barriers. Barriers she couldn't see.

"How can this be?" she asked Robin. "I know David loves me, I know I love him. This is just all too much for me." She said. "He knows I love him, I've told him so." "Has he told you the same?" Robin said sharply.

Before Dana could reply, "Dana, David can be a good man when he wants to be." Robin said barely getting words out of her mouth. "I think he is a great person." "What?" Dana asked. "You think David is a great person, I just told you that he might be cheating on me and you think he's a great person? You've only met him once." At the point, Robin felt flushed. "Yes, I think you've misunderstood him." Robin tried to sound convincing. "I just mean, your imagination is running wild."

Dana didn't know that Robin was also in love with David. Robin knew that Dana couldn't possibly be speaking of her. Robin wasn't sure.

Robin had run into David in the grocery store weeks ago. Robin had only met David once in passing when Dana had to bring back her leather jacket she borrowed some time ago. He was waiting for Dana in the car and they only waved from a distance. She knew from the brief minute she saw him she was in love with him. Robin had no idea of how Dana could have figured out what was going between her and David. She was hoping Dana wasn't speaking of another woman and that she was in fact the woman Dana could have been suspecting.

As Dana rambled on, Robin thought to herself how she betrayed her friend over a man; but she felt she loved this man too and he loved her back.

"I can't believe you're defending David." Dana said flatly. Quickly, Robin was pulled back into conversation with Dana. "I'm not defending David, Dana...I just don't think you know the whole truth about what's going on." Robin tried to sound like she was on her friend's side. "Give me David's number, I'll call him and find out what's going on."

Dana thought for a minute. "Robin, I don't think that's a good idea. We really should just leave this as is." She said quickly. Sensing something wasn't right with her friend; Dana's female spidey sense was peaked.

"Perhaps we should." Robin stated without any remorse on how she was feeling. Before Robin could hang up the phone on Dana; Dana heard a male voice through the phone. "Hey baby." David said to Robin.

The phone went dead.
